A post in "General guidelines/rules etc" requires staff attention

Directly insulting: "Stop turning off your brain and use your common sense" implies that those who don't share his beliefs are not thinking critically. You can both believe masks are only partially effective and still believe that everyone should contribute by wearing them without "turning off your brain"

It's generally my (and I think most) mod thought that flagging things like this is the best way to handle it. That way it's a community effort and not a single person.

malcolmputer #3 March 15, 2021, 3:55pm

I did flag it? Or do you mean that I should flag it without a comment instead of "anything else"?

Adam_Oas #4 March 15, 2021, 3:58pm

Ah, apologies. Once a flag is 'dealt with' by a mod, the rest of us don't get alerted to it. It's not a huge deal to add a post to the mods, but at least one of us did see the flag.

malcolmputer #5 March 15, 2021, 4:00pm

Ah, yes. I believe the mod that dealt with the flag is the mod that was flagged.

I did not work my own flag. Its a golden rule.

Its a nice concept but the government doesn't guarantee safety. The same way police are not there for your safety. We tend to confuse this concept. Everything you do, from leaving the house to driving a car is a calculated risk. This just happens to be one where we feel "safer" because someone told us that a mask would "protect" us.

Stop turning off your brain and start using your common sense.

Sure they can possibly help, but the science just isn't there with how it's been implemented and advertised.

I agreed on the please make it so one and ignored this one. I think everyone has had their say and can go back under their respective rocks.
